A SERIES OF MUSICAL REFLECTIONS

No:9

Despite the weather having turned, and the grey skies having appeared, we're continuing the Easter celebrations with Rimsky-Korsakov's spectacular Russian Easter Festival Overture. This one's a little longer than we're used to so far, but I'm sure you'll find it to be worth your while.

Composed between 1887 and 1888, this work is Rimsky-Korsakov's own retelling of Russian Easter celebrations, specifically (in his own words) "not in a domestic chapel, but in a cathedral thronged with people from every walk of life, and with several priests conducting the cathedral service." The musical material is derived from the Russian Obikhod, a collection of Orthodox polyphonic chants. In particular, he uses the melodies, 'Let God arise!', 'An angel wailed', and 'Christ has risen from the dead'. In this sense, this piece joins a vast catalogue of pieces which use either biblical texts or sacred music to re-tell the miracle of the Easter Story; over the last week, radio channels and online live streams have treated us to Bach's St. Matthew and St. John Passions, Handel's Messiah and many, many more.

The message and story of Christ's resurrection are clearly central amongst the composer's concerns when writing this piece; the score is wedged between two bible passages (Psalm 68:1-2 and Mark 16:1-6). However, what Rimsky-Korsakov captures so well are the realisations of the Easter story and its meaning for Christians. He musicalises the dazzling celebrations and the overflowing joy of an Easter scene, in all its glory, with an almost over-the-top symphonic language, a far-cry from the simplicity with which the original chants would be received, when sung in their original chant format. Rimsky-Korsakov himself wrote that he wanted to emulate "- the legendary and heathen aspect of the holiday, and the transition from the solemnity and mystery of the evening of Passion Saturday to the unbridled pagan-religious celebrations of Easter Sunday morning". So, however you're celebrating this Easter Monday, I hope the joy and vitality of this composer's interpretation of Eastertide will put a little spring in your step.

Something to listen out for in this piece: this piece is sort of a who's-who of the symphony orchestra. Rimsky-Korsakov's imaginative instrumentation is really clear in the way in which he weaves the melodies throughout the sections, featuring a violin solo here-, a brass fanfare there-. I might be biased but my favourite is the solo 'cello.
